

The Himalayan

Thursday, May 7, 2009, Baisakh 24, 2066, Nepal Sambat 1129

most inseparable twosome of our K-Town until I saw these two guys, the bestest of best friends (one a media personality and another from an affluent family) walking down Durbar Marg together, skipping with joy and applying lip balm on their lips making many passersby stop and wonder.

Yes, we all know the dangers of global warming and we do support the efforts towards conserving earth's resources. And of course 'Earth Hour' makes a lot of sense in NY or London or Amsterdam or Sydney where 'power-cuts' are as alien to them as well... Martians. Harka dai wanted to know why we in Nepal were so excited about putting out our already 'put-out' lights? As it is we are already living almost 80 pc of our days without electricity. Does this count for an act of reducing global warming? Are we going to get an award for conserving so much power (albeit by default)? Subject to ponder upon rather than asking those who get a little bit of 'batti ayo' time to sacrifice their short-lived moment in light.

Recently, a little birdie told me that there is trouble in the marital heaven of a well-known singer. She is known for her 'Who cares a tiny rat's a' attitude and praised for the family life she leads, and now all these news of she and her hubby parting away comes as a shock. She is such a darling, I hope the rumours circulating K-Town is just that and nothing more.

Here is a little dose of hot spicy gossip. Recently, my friend Jiggu went to savour some delicious momos at this joint in New Road. While he was waiting for his order (enough for three people) to arrive, he saw this unimaginable scene, which almost killed his appetite (which is very rare). He saw this artist (grandson of a well known artist) cosying up with his girl friend and super busy with some PDA. The whole surrounding got quite uncomfortable and one old couple even had to change their seats. FYI darling, it's N*D* for god's sake!!!! It's somewhere you go to eat, and when we say eat, we mean 'FOOD', you know, momo, chowmien, thukpa, not your girlfriend's hand. And the world is interested in learning whether you was waiting for the rain but no one was prepared for the hailstorm, which ruined the whole setting. But it was a pleasant surprise to watch the guest musicians busy with damage control. Hey, first of all "welcome to Nepal" and it's always nice to see people still down to earth and ready to help no matter how successful they are. Here is some lesson to be learnt.

That's all for this week. Catch ya'll later. Ciao.

GOD MADE US FUNKY

ALL HAIL: Music

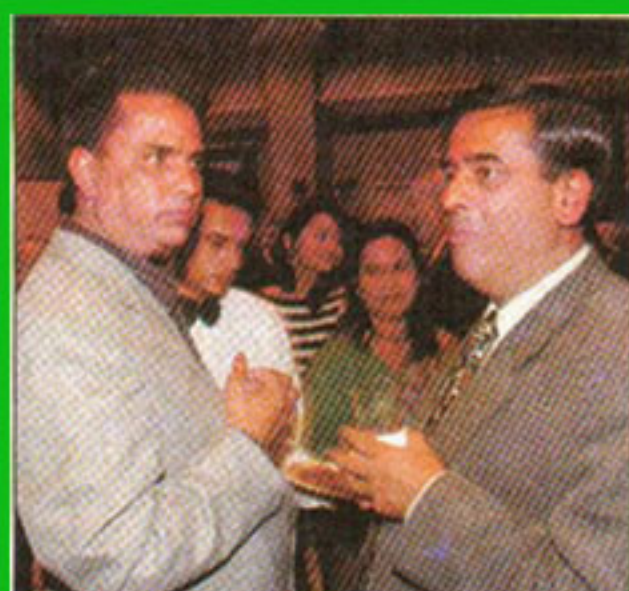

SHELTERED: Away from the rain

DJ Kranti with DJ Shisir

WHAT'S WITH YOUR EYES, DUDE? Ankit and Gaurav

EH! Haribansha Acharya

Barsha Shrestha with Constantijn Berning

Sahana Bajracharya with Ujjwal Shrestha

It's time to PARTY

Kathmandu High happenings in K mail photograph bloodym